HISTORY OF BILLIARDS

The word billiard is either derived from the French word billiard, one of the wooden sticks used to strike the balls, or bile, one of the billiard balls. The game of billiards evolved from a lawn game very similar to the game of croquet that was probably in France. The game was moved indoors to a wooden table with a green cloth that was supposed to represent grass. The billiard table also had a simple border placed around its borders. In the first plays of billiard, instead of being struck, the balls were shoved by wooden sticks called maces.

The cue was developed in the late 1600's. When the ball lay near the rail, the mace was a very hard thing to use because of its big head. Whenever this happened the billiard players would turn the mace around, and hit the balls with the tail end of the mace. The tail was "queue", which is where we get the cue. For a long time, only men were allowed to use the cue. Women were forced to use the mace because it was thought that women would rip the cloth with the sharper cue stick.

Billiard tables originally had flat vertical walls for rails, and their only function was to keep the balls from falling off the table. The rails resembled river banks, and were even used to be called banks. When players found out that the balls would bounce off the rails, they began to deliberately aim at the banks. That was the invention of the "bank shot". The "bank shot" is where a ball is aimed, and shot at the wall as part of a shot.

The dominant game of billiards in Britain from about 1770 until the 1920's was English Billiards. The British billiard tradition is still carried out in a billiard game called Snooker. They say it is possible to see a Snooker tournament in Britain everyday.

HOW TO MAINTAIN BILLIARDS AND POOL TABLES-

Though every pool player wants to focus on his or her game, he or she must nevertheless learn how to maintain your table. If a pool player expects his or her table to last then they need to take proper care of it. Here are six steps that will allow a table to last for a while.

The first tip is to consistently vacuum the chalk dust that has found itself under the cloth. (CAUTION: Never use the nozzle top for the vacuum as it will pull the cloth from the bed of the table.)

The second tip concerns a bad habit that is common amongst amateur pool players. Many players lean heavily against tables or bump them. Though it often serves as comic relief, it can cause extensive damage over time and could cause the table's seams to break. Lines will develop in your cloth from a broken seam, a signature image too often seen in pool halls.

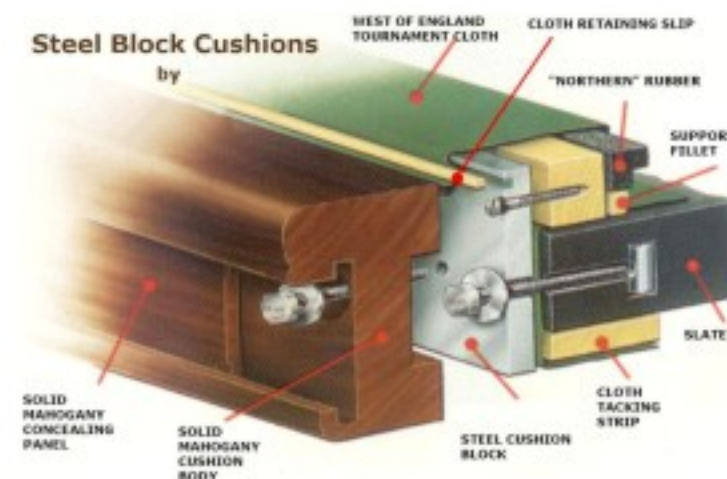

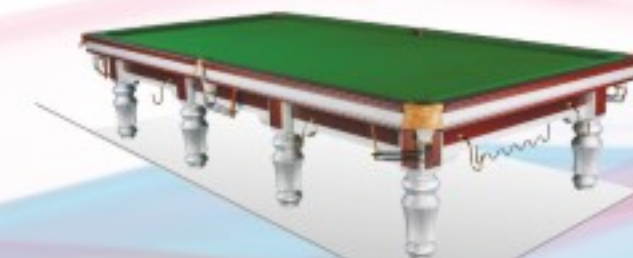

The third tip is that owners can buy and use a common tool, lint rollers, to pick up dust and particles off the table. No matter how great your ability to win, if you keep a table in poor shape, it signals a lack of professionalism. Another tip that can be used to keep your table looking great is to spray mist of water on the table cloth. Though it seems totally unnecessary, this can let the table keep its original color. Another quick maintenance tip is to always brush a table clean in the direction that you break. This makes the table more presentable to other players.

The last tip to preserve your table is the refrain from putting your pool table subject to sunlight. Sunlight and never eat and drink near table causes increased rates of fading in respect to the pool table's fabric.

By keeping in mind these handy tips, any pool table owner can present his or her guests with a professional looking pool table. Even more rewarding is that with consistent care, a pool table's life span can be increased by many years.
