Did you know ?

Before sugar was readily available in the ancient western world, confectionery was based on honey.

Honey was used in Ancient times to coat fruits and flowers to preserve them or to create sweets.

Around the 6th centuries BC, the Persians, followed by Greeks, made contact with the Indian subcontinent and adopted and then spread sugar and sugarcane agriculture.

The word 'TOFFEE' appeared in the Oxford English dictionary for the first time in 1825.

According to most food historians it was originated in Wales and then became popular across Britain and Europe where supplies of butter and eventually imported sugar were plentiful.

Toffee gets its name from a Mediterranean rum made from molasses which was eventually used as a flavoring agent.

Did you know ?

It has been claimed that jelly beans were first mentioned during 1861, when Boston confectioner Archie Andrews urged people to send his jelly beans to soldiers during the American Civil War. On July 5, 1905, jelly beans were mentioned in the Chicago Daily News. Most historians contend that jelly beans were first associated with celebrations of Easter in the United States sometime during the 1930s due to their egg-like shape.

It is difficult to know when lollipops were first made by home chefs. Charles Dickens refers to candies on a stick in his novels of the mid-nineteenth century.

It is known that George Smith, a candymaker who liked to eat a competitor's chocolate caramels on a stick, attached a hard candy to a stick and referred to this creation as a lollypop (named after a favored racehorse of his named Lolly Pop).
