

Rooftop Waterproofing Surface

This image depicts a flat rooftop surface treated with a waterproofing or protective coating. The dark layered finish suggests the use of bituminous or membrane waterproofing material commonly applied to prevent water leakage and improve roof durability. Large water storage tanks and surrounding urban buildings can also be seen in the background. Such rooftop treatments are widely used in residential and commercial structures to enhance weather resistance and extend the life of the building.