

history of perfume

hieroglyphics in tombs show that ancient egyptians and mesopotamians were making perfume as far back as 3,000 bc. egyptian priests, thought to be the fathers of modern perfume, used aromatic resins to mask the smell of sacrificial offerings.

they also believed burning incense pleased the gods, grinding up ingredients such as myrrh, sweet rush, wine and juniper each night to ensure the safe return from the underworld of the sun god, ra.

today perfume buffs can visit the perfume room at the edfu temple, where hieroglyphics depict recipes for ointments and inhalations. so strong was the link between scents and the deities that pharaohs, or high priests, were buried in fragranced tombs. and so strong, too, were the scents used that the sweet smells wafted out when archaeologists opened the tombs in 1897.
